Continuing Professional Development

Scientific Meetings

2014 FPM Refresher Course Day & ASM– 4 May & 5-9 May Suntec & Sands Expo and Convention Centres, Singapore

The Faculty's Refresher Course Day and ASM programs were a great success. These were a tribute to the hard work of the Faculty's Scientific Convenors, Dr Lewis Holford and Dr Kian Hian Tan, and organising committee members Professor Peter Teddy and Dr Nathan Taylor. The Refresher Course Day attracted a record 213 delegates as well as good support from the healthcare industry with 5 exhibitors present. The program "Pain at the Cutting Edge: Surgery and pain" explored the interface between surgery and pain medicine. The program examined the science underlying post-surgical pain and discussed issues surrounding the management of pain in the peri- and postoperative periods, and the link between pain management and surgical outcomes. The day was completed with dinner at the iconic Raffles Hotel. Dr Phoebe Scott, an entertaining dinner speaker delivered an informative presentation on art in Singapore which included the re-opening of the former Supreme Court building as the National Art Gallery of Singapore. Associate Professor Brendan Moore was thanked for his leadership and significant contributions as Dean in advancing the Faculty's strategic initiatives.

Media coverage of both the Refresher Course Day and the pain stream of the ASM was widespread and included media releases and interviews from the FPM ASM Visitor Professor Audun Stubhaug and FPM ASM Officer, Dr Michael Vagg. Media can be viewed at:

Research

Electronic Persistent Pain Outcomes Collaboration (ePPOC): Roll-out of this initiative continues to expand across NSW and other states. Currently 8 adult sites in NSW are well underway in terms of collecting data, and another 10 sites are in preparation stage. Around Australia, 14 services in Victoria will potentially come online pending negotiations with the Department of Health. Queensland has 5 sites coming online pending funding from the state health department. Western Australia has 2 sites coming online. New Zealand will be joining with 2 sites coming online with the help of some ACC support.

The ePPOC team in Wollongong is updating the EPI centre website and its associated software. The new version will include a paediatric data set that will assist in streamlining data entry. The use of on-line data entry where possible will serve to maximise efficiency.

An Opioid conversion table as well as ePPOC major drug groupings have been developed by the FPM Research Committee working group.

VicPPOP, a Victorian outcome project which was run across 3 centres (Caulfield/Melbourne Health/Ballarat), is currently being evaluated; data collection should finish in approximately December 2014. The study used a larger data set. This included a functional measure and a detailed medication analysis as well as the measures used in ePPOC. The results will be presented when available.

Acute Pain Management Scientific Evidence 4th Edition: The Working Party continues to make good progress in accordance with the business plan. Nearly all potential contributors have been identified. Currently 16 contributions have been received and are ready for editing. The project is on track for publication in 2015.

Pain Device Implant Register: This initiative is progressing well and has now gone to tender for a university partner to develop, maintain and manage the registry. The Faculty is working cooperatively with all stakeholder device companies who are supportive of this initiative. Seed funding has been generously provided by Medtronic to allow the project to progress in the early stages.

Build advocacy and access

Professional

National Pain Strategy: Painaustralia's Annual Review 2013 and the National Pain Strategy Draft Review – April 2014 are now available on the Painaustralia website. The Board acknowledged the substantial progress being made in advancing education and advocacy.

Use of Pain Medicine Specialist (Physician) Terminology: Concerns with respect to patient safety and standards arising from 'non-Fellows' undertaking various procedures or using titles like 'pain specialist' have been brought to the Faculty Board, as a result legal advice was sought on this issue. Our advice is that the National Law imposes clear restrictions on the use of protected titles. In particular, it is an offence under the National Law for a person who is not a specialist health practitioner to use a protected specialist title or 'hold out' to be registered in a recognised specialty. The protected title recognised under the National Law with respect to pain management is "Specialist Pain Medicine Physician". It is an offence under the National Law for a person to knowingly or recklessly use a specialist title for a recognised specialty unless the person is officially registered under the National Law in that specialty.

The Faculty intends to assess on a case-by-case basis, those incidents brought to its attention pertaining to the use of protected titles and/or misleading and deceptive conduct. It will take action in the form of a letter to the practitioner to outline our legal advice on the matter.
